

ESSENTIALS

Sunglasses, £131, Ray-Ban. Cashmere trousers, £2,000, Loro Piana. Suitcase, £219, Antler

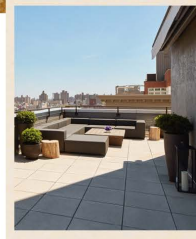

FASHION TRAVEL

Edward Enninful with, from left, Ellie Pithers, Sarah Harris and Laura Ingham at Paris's Hôtel de Crillon

DENA GIANNINI

In NYC, 11 Howard (right) is our home away from home. The rooms are so lovely and the staff are so supportive of our timetables. I love that we can take our meetings in The Library. I can't wait to go back.

CITY SPRINTS

How the Vogue editors navigated four fashion weeks in style

OLIVIA SINGER

On our last night in New York, Marc Jacobs' immersive show (right) – choreographed by Karole Armitage – at the Park Avenue Armory was the highlight of my season.

Right: the Vogue team and their London Fashion Week Mercedes-Benz

COMPILED BY AMEL MUKHTAR, ALASDAIR McLELLAN

LAURA INGHAM

Where else could be better to sleep in Milan than the iconic 19th century Galleria Vik Milano (left). It overlooks the Prada store, which naturally added shopping to our non-stop schedule of shows. At breakfast, we could watch visitors follow the tradition of spinning on their heels on its famous mosaic floor to make a wish – ours was to stay a little longer.

SARAH HARRIS

To open your curtains at the InterContinental Paris Le Grand and look straight out at the Palais Garnier (left) is magical. We literally rolled out of bed and into Stella McCartney's show, which is staged there every season. Staying at the hotel also means more time to devour croissants in its Café de la Paix.